CHAIR: Abbey McCarthy

Physical activity is billed as the new wonder drug for cancer helping people overcome fatigue, anxiety and depression, while protecting the heart, lungs and bones. In some cases, being physically active has been shown to slow disease progression, improve survival and reduce the chance of recurrence. For those diagnosed with sarcoma the effects of treatment often limits their ability to return to physical activity. In this session we review the latest evidence and start to ask questions around the barriers to participation, how can we develop the research and evidence base within this domain to improve knowledge and clinical outcome - Dr Anna Campbell
